Postmodernism represents a worldview that argues against any one unique perspective of reality. Some would contend that it is a style of thought that could lead to a fragmented destruction of knowledge reaching apocalyptic proportions. But can this anarchic doctrine actually be the genesis of new ideas? Join RMIT academic John Lenarcic in conversation with Dr. Bonna Jones (RMIT School of Business Information Technology) as they ponder the emergence of originality in randomness and other sundry oxymorons.
