The Centre for Applied Social Research (CASR) was established in 1989 and is based in the School of Global Studies, Social Science and Planning on RMIT’s City campus. It has a long history of conducting significant social science research on key areas of social change and social policy.

CASR is committed to the idea that effective and equitable policy choices need to be founded upon insightful public debate and that debate requires historically and theoretically informed applied social research. Areas of particular interest include:

- Workplace and industrial relations and policy
- Homelessness and public policy
- Family violence histories and policy
- The changing nature of paid work and welfare provision
- Methodologies for generating and using evidence for policy and practice
- Qualitative and quantitative methodologies
- State care and protection
- Community health issues and policy

Researchers at the CASR work collaboratively on projects with colleagues at national and international universities, government bodies and industry organisations. Most CASR research is funded through national and international competitive grants; in 2009 the Centre attracted more than $AUD1.4m in external research funding.

CASR researchers are published widely and regularly, being cited in the media as experts on issues such as women and the workplace, homelessness, care and protection and domestic violence.

The objectives and strategic focus of the Centre are:

- To conduct high quality applied social research on employment and workplace relations, social welfare provisions and social policy, and public sector evaluation
- To promote public discussion on governments public health, employment and social welfare policies
- To provide postgraduate research students the opportunity to be involved in CASR’s interdisciplinary research activities
- To maintain the Centre’s emphasis on balancing peer-reviewed competitive grant research with contract research for industry partners and community agencies
- To maintain the Centre's vibrant links with its environment. These links include relationships with the School of Global Studies, Social Science and Planning in which it is located, with other researchers in Australia and internationally, and with a range of industry partners and community agencies.
Associate Professor
Chris Chamberlain is the joint author of Youth Homelessness: Early Intervention and Prevention (1998), Counting the Homeless 2001 (ABS 2003) and Counting the Homeless 2006 (ABS 2008). In 2009, Chris was completing state and territory reports for Counting the Homeless 2006 and working on an ARC project, ‘Pathways to and from Homelessness’.

CASR conducts nationally significant research on key areas of social change and social policy. We are committed to the idea that effective and equitable policy choices need to be founded upon insightful public debate and that debate requires historically and theoretically informed applied social research. Research staff in CASR have a broad range of interests, but our work converges around three themes.

One group of researchers have particular expertise in the changing character of paid work and employment relations and related policy issues. The main strands of their research focus on the quality of part-time work; work and family balance in regional areas; gender equality in employment; casual and precarious work; the intersection of work and family and the impact of employment regulation, including anti-discrimination law. The research conducted in these areas is also concerned with uncovering and mapping the connections that link the worlds of paid work and welfare.

Another group of colleagues in CASR focus on various disadvantaged groups, the changing nature of welfare provision and related policy issues. These researchers have particular expertise in: the enumeration of the homeless population; pathways to and from homelessness; issues related to domestic violence and related policy responses; the life histories of people who grew up in institutional care; and the history of the women’s refuge movement. They also carry out research focusing on issues related to illicit drugs use, illegal sex workers and related health issues.

A third group of researchers work across disciplines on practice-informed evidence-based policy and practice in health and well-being. Projects focus on both developing and applying evidence about complicated and complex interventions. Processes and methods include program theory, systems theory, action research, narrative and developmental evaluation, non-experimental impact evaluation, performance indicators, realist synthesis, knowledge translation and communities of practice. Their research is undertaken with government and non-government organisations that address public health, health promotion, occupational health and safety, international development, family and community services, community development, natural resource management and housing.
Colleagues in CASR have a strong track record of success with ARC grant applications. In 2009 we had eight ongoing ARC projects (six Linkage and two Discovery). The ARC projects included, ‘A Regional Perspective on Work and Family Balance and Changes in Employment Regulation’. This was being carried out by Dr Sara Charlesworth, Dr Iain Campbell, Dr Larissa Bamberry and Kerry Haynes together with Associate Professor Marian Baird from the University of Sydney. The project looks at the impact of employment regulation on employee work-family balance outcomes.

Dr Suellen Murray was undertaking an ARC Discovery project on ‘Australian Domestic Violence Public Policy: history, discourse and impact, 1985-2005; and Dr Judith Smart had an ARC Linkage grant to write a ‘History of the National Council of Women of Australia, 1931-2006’, with Professor Marian Quartly from Monash University.

In 2009, CASR conducted a total of 23 contract research projects and 11 commercial projects with a total income of more than 1.4 million. Dr Helen Marshall undertook a scoping study of ‘Sociology in Australia’, supported by the Australian Learning and Teaching Council. Dr Suellen Murray carried out a project on ‘Violence against Women during Homelessness’, funded by the Salvation Army; and Dr Iain Campbell and Dr Larissa Bamberry undertook a project on ‘Flexible Working-time Arrangements’ for the United Firefighters’ Union of Australia.

Professor Patricia Rogers undertook a ‘Review and Analysis of Leadership Development Practices for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders’, funded by the Department of Families, Housing, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs (FaHCSIA). Patricia was also involved in an international project on ‘Impact Evaluation for Development’ funded by the Rockefeller Foundation, USA.

Dr Yoland Wadsworth was undertaking the ‘Narrative Evaluation Action Research (NEAR) Project’, funded by the Department of Health. She was also revising two books on research methodology (Do it Yourself Social Research and Everyday Evaluation on the Run) to be published by Allen and Unwin in 2010.

Dr James Rowe began a project on ‘Surveying HIV and Need among the Unregulated Sex Industry’, in conjunction with the Inner South Community Health Service; and Ms Kaye Stevens undertook a project about ‘Health Behaviour Change’, evaluating the effectiveness of interventions to reduce health inequalities, using a ‘realist approach’.

In 2009, the School of Global Studies, Social Science and Planning was restructured into three teaching and research divisions. The Centre for Applied Social Research joined the Social Work, Community Services and Social Policy cluster. This means a close affiliation with the disciplines of Social Work, Science, Legal and Dispute Studies, Youth Work and Community Services. It promises many new opportunities to collaborate on research projects with colleagues in the school, and better opportunities to inform students about the latest research policy developments.

CASR is an established research centre with a track record of ARC success and substantial contract research. My colleagues produce high quality research which has community impact in a wide range of policy areas. This augurs well for the future and I look forward to a successful year in 2010.

Chris Chamberlain
Director
In 2009, CASR conducted a total of 23 contract research projects and 11 commercial projects, with a total income of more than 1.4 million. The Centre developed its research and policy output in a number of significant ways including hosting a series of seven public seminars, two book launches, 16 commissioned reports, eight journal articles and numerous presentations at public seminars, forums, conferences and guest lectures.

Applied Social Science Seminar Series
The Centre organised a series of seven public seminars in collaboration with colleagues from the School of Global Studies, Social Science and Planning:

» The dynamics of homelessness: recent findings and their policy implications presented by Dr Guy Johnson (AHURI).

» Patriarchy: the eventful life of a key concept in western social and political thought presented by Professor Pavla Miller (Social Science).

» Doing research in partnership: a case study of a successful partnership between RMIT and Mackillop Family Services presented by Dr Suellen Murray (CASR).

» Epistemology, systems thinking, and (more truly) living human services presented by Adjunct Professor Yoland Wadsworth (CASR).

» Welfare to Work: Reforming or Deforming of Character? Presented by Professor Catherine McDonald (Social Work).

» Blood, Sweat and Tears: youth work students on placement and ‘good WIL’ presented by Michael Emslie (Youth Work).

After the Orphanage: Life Beyond the Children’s Home
Co-authored by Suellen Murray, the book draws on oral history interviews with 40 people who were part of the Life After Care Research Project undertaken by CASR and MacKillop Family Services. The 40 participants grew up in Catholic orphanages and homes in Victoria and left care between 1945 and 1983.
Gender and the Contours of Precarious Employment
Co-edited by Iain Campbell, the book brings together contributions addressing issues of social inequalities which include case studies exploring the size, nature, and dynamics of precarious employment in different industrialised countries such as Canada, Germany, the United States, and Australia and chapters examining conceptual and methodological challenges in the study of precarious employment in comparative perspective.

Counting the Homeless 2006
A new series of eight state and territory Counting the Homeless reports co-authored by Chris Chamberlain for the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW). The reports reveal 105,000 Australians were homeless at the time of the 2006 Census and Victoria had 20,511 homeless people. The reports followed the release of the Federal Government’s White Paper on homelessness in December 2008, which set the ambitious goal of halving homelessness by 2020.

Somewhere Safe to Call Home: Violence Against Women During Homelessness
Written by Suellen Murray, the report focuses on the violence experienced by women who are homeless and some of the policy changes needed to improve their circumstance.

Impact of the Recession on Women: Under-Employment and Unemployment
Consultation workshop looking at the impact of the economic downturn on women were being held in each state and territory across Australia, with the Victorian one organised by Sara Charlesworth and sponsored by key women’s advocacy groups. Issues such as lack of accessible out-of-hours school care for children, the precarious nature of Australia’s largely female casual workforce and part-time employment were raised.

2009 HASS on the Hill Conference
Together with 4 GSSSP delegates, Chris Chamberlain attended The Council for the Humanities, Arts and Social Sciences HASS on the Hill conference in Canberra. The conference provided the HASS sector opportunities to speak directly to the decision-makers and to discuss the value of their work with members of parliament. The Council arranged for Chris to meet with Senator Gavin Marshall and Senator Anne McEwen as part of the conference.

Other activities worthy of mention:
» Sara Charlesworth conducted a successful field research in Toronto in April 2009 with the Canada-Asia Pacific Award (CAPA) she received in 2008.
» CASR welcomed our newly appointed senior associate, Dr Rick Davies, who has an international reputation for his innovative methods for monitoring and evaluation in international development and extensive experience with international development agencies.
» Patricia Rogers was elected to the Board of the American Evaluation Association, the second non-American to be elected. The Association has over 6,000 members across the USA and internationally.
» Helen Marshall provided NVivo support and advice for approximately five postgraduates in the portfolio and two RMIT staff projects. She was also involved in the RMIT’s Qualitative Interest Group and played a leading role in the University of Melbourne’s NVivo User’s Group.
» A major office refurbishment saw new carpet, a new staff meeting area and office equipment upgrades in January 2009.
Our group of researchers have a wide range of social research interests and have particular expertise in the employment and workplace relations, social welfare provisions and social policy, and public sector evaluation.

Researchers in CASR

Dr Larissa Bamberry
Research Fellow

Larissa has a background in public policy and industrial relations. She worked on a range of projects including a study of Work Life Balance in Regional Victoria, and research into the impact of skill shortages on the working patterns of Victorian nurses.

Prior to working at CASR, Larissa was responsible for managing and coordinating the online awards and agreements database at the Workplace Research Centre at the University of Sydney. She has also had extensive experience in the New South Wales public sector, working across a range of policy areas including labour market policy, education and training, industrial relations, women’s policy and sport and recreation.

Larissa’s research interests include globalisation, the rise of non-standard employment practices, especially part-time and casual work, and the intersection of gender relations in the home and in the workplace.

Dr Iain Campbell
Senior Research Fellow

Iain Campbell worked on several major projects regarding labour market restructuring, working time patterns and the quality of work. Prior to this appointment, he was an ARC Postdoctoral Research Fellow at CASR, working on a project that examined trade union strategies and changing working-time patterns in Australia, France, Germany and the United Kingdom. Before joining CASR, he worked as a Research Fellow at the National Key Centre in Industrial Relations at Monash University. He has a background in the sociology of work, industrial relations and economic geography. His doctoral research at the University of Melbourne was on the topic of casual employment in Australia.

Iain is experienced in the use of official labour force statistics, both in Australia and cross-nationally. He can speak German and French and has an extensive knowledge of contemporary European debates and policy initiatives in the general areas of employment and social welfare. He is a member of several professional associations, including the International Sociological Association (ISA), the International Industrial Relations Association (IIRA) and the International Working Party on Labour Market Segmentation (IWPLMS).

Apart from working-time, his research interests include labour regulation, labour restructuring, casual employment, work and family issues, unemployment and the future of work.
Associate Professor Chris Chamberlain
Director

Counting the Homeless 2006 found that the number of homeless people had increased from 99,900 in 2001 to 105,000 in 2006. These findings influenced the Commonwealth Government’s white paper on homelessness (The Road Home, 2008) which set the target to halve homelessness by 2020. The Australian Government will spend $7.8 billion over the next five years to reduce homelessness. Chris was invited to attend the 2020 Summit in Parliament House, Canberra because of his expertise on homelessness.

In 2009, Chris completed reports on homelessness for each state and territory government. These reports provide information about the social characteristics and geographical distribution of homeless people at the local level. All state and territory governments use these reports to make decisions about the allocation of resources in their state.

Chris’s other research interests include social inequality and youth issues.

Dr Sara Charlesworth
Senior Research Fellow

Sara Charlesworth has a background in social work, industrial relations and legal studies. She has extensive experience in the areas of equal employment opportunity, work/family balance and workplace reform. Sara was a member of the Victorian Equal Opportunity Board from 1988 to 1994 and a member of the Social Security Appeals Tribunal from 1995 to 2001. She is an inaugural member of the Victorian Government’s Working Families Council, a foundation member of the Work+Family Policy Roundtable, a member of the Association of Industrial Relations Academics of Australia and New Zealand, and a member of the International Industrial Relations Association and its Regulating for Decent Work Study Group.

Sara's research interests centre on gender equality in employment at both the labour market and organisational levels. She has worked on many government and NGO funded research projects around pay equity, work & family balance, discrimination and industrial relations. She has undertaken a number of ARC funded projects and has completed a Post-Doctoral Fellowship on discourses of discrimination in the workplace and ARC Linkage projects on quality part-time work in policing and gender equitable organisational change. She is currently working with CASR colleagues on an ARC Linkage project exploring the impact of changing employment regulation on employee work/family/community balance through a regional perspective. Sara is also part of a multi-university research team working on an ARC Discovery project examining the links between job quality and the mental health and well-being of working parents and their children that ends in 2009.

Ms Kerry Haynes
Research Fellow

Kerry has a background in public health and health promotion and program evaluation. She comes to CASR after working as the Senior Evaluation Officer in the Research, Strategy and Policy Unit at The Victorian Health Promotion Foundation.

Her research interests include work-life balance in regional areas; impact of work on health and community participation; workplace health promotion; maternal and child health; and evaluation of health services.
Dr Helen Marshall
Adjunct Senior Research Associate

Helen studied sociology and history at Monash University, and worked as a teacher in secondary schools and a post-secondary college before working at RMIT. After nearly thirty years as a teacher, she moved in 2006 to an associate position in CASR. She is the lead researcher on a project funded by the Carrick Institute and TASA to look at teaching sociology. She now specialises in the use of the computer program NVivo for managing qualitative data analyses.

She is active in The Australian Sociological Association (TASA), and has been editor of the electronic Qualitative Research Journal published by the Association for Qualitative Research.

Her PhD thesis on voluntary childlessness in 1993 led to the publication of Not Having Families (Oxford University Press), and to her interest in qualitative research methods that involve using computers in analysis of qualitative data. Her interest in teaching led to the textbook on the sociology of deviance and to her recent nation-wide project on sociology in Australian universities.

Dr Suellen Murray
Senior Research Fellow

Suellen Murray has worked in a range of positions including those concerned with human services service delivery, research, policy development and program administration. Prior to joining CASR, she was employed as a Senior Policy Officer at the Victorian Community Council Against Violence, where the focus of her work was domestic violence prevention. Prior to that, she taught in women’s studies and social science at Edith Cowan University in Western Australia.

Her areas of research interest include the history of domestic violence services and social policy concerning domestic violence which were the topics of her book, More than Refuge: Changing Responses to Domestic Violence (UWA Press, 2002). She has also researched the life histories of people who grew up in care and co-authored the book, After the Orphanage: Life Beyond the Children’s Home (UNSW Press, 2009).
Professor Patricia Rogers
Professor of Public Sector Evaluation

Patricia has worked in public sector evaluation and research for more than 25 years, across a wide range of programs and levels of government. In recent years, she has worked with many international organisations and governments including the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research (CGIAR), the Ministry of Education (New Zealand), Health Scotland (UK), the Ministry of Education (Singapore), the Foundation for Advanced Study on Evaluation (Japan), the Office of the Public Service Commission (South Africa), Network of Networks on Impact Evaluation (NONIE), and the United Nations Evaluation Group (UNEG).

Patricia is Associate Editor of the American Evaluation Association’s series ‘New Directions in Evaluation’, and is on the Editorial Boards of the journals: Evaluation, American Journal of Evaluation, and the Journal of Multidisciplinary Evaluation. She was previously Spencer Postdoctoral Fellow at the Harvard Project on Schooling at Children and then Director of the CIRCLE prior to joining CASR in 2008.

Her research currently focuses on methods for impact evaluation of complicated and complex interventions, and developing organisations’ capacities for generating and using evidence to inform policy and practice, particularly through using program theory and realist synthesis.

In 2009, in addition to research projects in these areas, Patricia delivered evaluation workshops in San Francisco, Chicago, Washington DC and Ottawa at The Evaluators’ Institute (now part of George Washington University), at the joint conference of the African Evaluation Association (AfEA) and the International initiative for Impact Evaluation (3IE), the Australasian Evaluation Society conference, and the American Evaluation Association conference and an invited presentation at the Productivity Commission Roundtable on ‘Strengthening Evidence-based Policy in the Australian Federation’.

Dr James Rowe
Research Fellow/Lecturer

James Rowe works on a part-time basis as a Research Fellow with CASR (and lectures in politics and sociology within the School of Global Studies, Social Science and Planning for the remainder of his time). He has worked at RMIT in a research capacity since 2000 before accepting a part-time teaching role in 2005. He received his doctorate from Monash University in 2000 after conducting a critical analysis of Victorian drug policy in which he argued against the continued politicization (and consequent criminalization) of what is essentially a health and welfare issue.

James’ research has had a largely qualitative focus. He believes that the experiences that we have as diverse and different members of the community emphasise our similarities rather than our differences. However, circumstances often beyond personal control lead to many members of the community being marginalised and losing their ‘voice’ – particularly when discussing policies and practices that directly affect their lives.

His research interests include contemporary Australian politics, particularly the continued corruption of liberal-democratic processes; public policy, particularly policies that affect those who are marginalised from the policy-making process; social exclusion; illicit street sex work; drug use (legal and illegal); and the politics of health.
Dr Judith Smart
Adjunct Professor

Judith Smart’s research interests focus on twentieth-century Australian history. She has co-edited a collection of articles, An Anzac Muster, on social change and war in Australia and New Zealand and a collection of articles on the 1950s, The Forgotten Fifties. She also edited a special issue of Australian Historical Studies on writing the history of women in Australia called ‘Twenty Years On’. Her other interests and published work deal with women and political protest, women and religion, conservative women’s organisations, suffrage and postsuffrage movements, temperance reform, war and social change, the social history of venereal disease, and Billy Graham’s 1959 crusade.

Judith was the editor of Australian Historical Studies from 1994 to 1999 and remains on the editorial board. She is also on the editorial board of the US-based Journal of Popular Culture and is a reviews editor for the Victorian Historical Journal, as well as serving on the Victorian Working Party of the Australian Dictionary of Biography. She is currently engaged in writing a history of Melbourne during the Great War. She is also researching influences on the mass women’s organisations, specifically the Housewives Associations and the Country Women’s Association, from the 1920s to the 1960s.

Ms Kaye Stevens
Research Fellow

Kaye is a research fellow with the Evidence Based Policy and Practice research program at the Sustainable Health and Well-Being Research Institute. The research program is concerned with promoting the generation and utilisation of evidence that is ‘fit for purpose’ in policies and programs. Her research focus is a realist synthesis of health related behaviour change and she worked on the economic evaluation of the Sustainable Dairy Farming Families program.

Kaye is currently working on an Australian Research Alliance for Children and Youth (ARACY) funded collaborative project with the Parenting Research Centre, Benevolent Society, Centre for Community Child Health and other RMIT researchers. The ARACY project focuses on building practice based evidence through the evaluation of parenting and early childhood intervention programs which will deepen understanding of the future research needed to develop the capacity of program evaluations to improve the effectiveness of programs.
Adjunct Professor Yoland Wadsworth is one of Australia’s pioneers in the use of integral and transformative social research and evaluation methodologies in health, human and community services for the past 38 years, including the use of action research, dialogic, participatory and ‘whole systems’ inquiry and community/consumer participation.

She is author of Australia’s best-selling research and evaluation texts – Do It Yourself Social Research and Everyday Evaluation on the Run (both 2e Allen & Unwin, 1997, over 50,000 copies); and is currently completing a final methodology book about a transdisciplinary theory of inquiry as the dynamic for human services change and formation—Building in Research and Evaluation: Human inquiry for living systems. She is also the chief investigator and project manager of the Narrative Evaluation Action Research (NEAR) Phase 4 Project in integrated health promotion funded by the Department of Health Service, North and West Metropolitan Region, being conducted with partner organisation the McCaughey VicHealth Centre, University of Melbourne.

Yoland’s research interests focus on the use of social research and evaluation methodologies for enhancing systemic human life.

She is a member of four journal boards and a Fellow of the Australasian Evaluation Society, and in 2009 was appointed to the Committee of Ross House, appointed a Distinguished Fellow in the University of Cincinnati, Action Research Center, College of Education, Criminal Justice and Human Services, and appointed a member of the Awards Committee of the Australasian Evaluation Society.

Part of our research work is funded via competitive grants such as those offered by the Australian Research Council (ARC). Other research work is funded by federal and state governments, community organisations and institutes.

CASR conducts significant national and international research on employment and workplace relations, social welfare provisions and social policy, and public sector evaluation.

Employment and workplace relations

Job quality and the mental health and well-being of working parents and their children

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Discovery Grant)
Research team: Lyndall Strazdins (The ANU), Bryan Rodgers (The ANU), Dr S Charlesworth, Prof MP Bittman (University of New England), A/Prof JM Nicholson (Griffiths; Rennie D’Souza (The ANU), Dorothy Broom (The ANU), and Mark Clements (The ANU)

Supporting the health and well-being of parents and young children is a national research and policy priority, as is the need to promote better work and family balance. Although employment supports families financially, this may come at a cost if aspects of the job affect parent well-being, or strains family relationships, which are critical to children’s development and well-being. The research uses nationally representative data from two waves of the Longitudinal Study of Australian Children (Growing Up in Australia), which is a unique study of families with young children. The project addresses key components of Australia’s Second National Mental Health Plan and policies targeting a healthy start to life, and supplies evidence for the development of family, employment and social policy that promotes and protects the well-being of Australian families.
A Regional Perspective on Work and Family Balance and Changes in Employment Regulation

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Linkage Grant)

Chief investigators: Sara Charlesworth, Iain Campbell and Marian Baird (The University of Sydney)

Research team: Kerry Haynes and Larissa Bamberry

Industry partners: Workforce Victoria and Regional Development Victoria

Work/family balance is a focus of significant attention at the community, national and international level. This project will generate new knowledge about the ways in which employment regulation directly and indirectly impacts on employee work/family balance outcomes within different regional and industry contexts. A growing body of research recognises the linkages between employment regulation and effects on child and parent well-being and health, labour force supply, and economic outcomes. However, little is known about how geographical location shapes work/family balance. The research will thus contribute to improved understandings and to better social policy at the local, state and federal levels.

Restructuring in the Non-Profit Social Services – Canada/Australia Comparisons, 2005–2008

Grantor: McMaster University and RMIT University

Research team: Donna Baines (McMaster University, Canada) and Sara Charlesworth

This project involves a comparison of changing conditions and relations within and across the non-profit social services sector in Canada and Australia. The goal of this two-country study is the development of a detailed and multi-level portrait of restructuring and the changing conditions of work life in the non-profit social services, paying particular attention to race, gender, managerialism and workplace resistance. In-depth interviews with a variety of players in the sector explore larger trends and local impacts.

Industrial Relations and Changing Work Patterns in the Canadian Community Services

Grantor: International Council for Canadian Studies (ICCS)

Chief investigator: Sara Charlesworth

Sara Charlesworth was awarded a Canada-Asia Pacific Award (CAPA) grant to undertake research on employment regulation in the community services sector in Canada. A paper on this research ‘The regulation of paid care workers’ wages and conditions in the non-profit sector: A Toronto case study’ is forthcoming in Relations Industrielles/Industrial Relations as a result.

Flexible working-time arrangements for the United Firefighters’ Union of Australia

Grantor: United Firefighters’ Union of Australia (Victorian Branch)

Research team: Iain Campbell and Larissa Bamberry

The research aims to provide expert analysis to the union to assist its development of policies regarding flexible working-time arrangements; and to provide information to the union about the current and potential interest of members in this form of working-time arrangements. Using data obtained from survey and in-depth focus groups, a written report will be presented to the executive of the United Firefighters’ Union to decide policy options.

Social welfare provision and policy

Australian domestic violence public policy: history, discourse and impact, 1985–2005

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Discovery Grant)

Chief investigator: Suellen Murray

Research team: Anastasia Powell (La Trobe University, previously CASR, RMIT University)

Domestic violence has significant costs to the community and this project will have national benefits by identifying effective policy directions. Through a combination of textual analysis and interviews with key policy makers, the research is documenting the history of public policy responses to domestic violence in Australia for the past 20 years and analysing the range of approaches and their implications over this time. The project will provide better understandings of the ways in which domestic violence policy has developed over time and, in doing so, provide assistance to state, territory and federal governments in formulating future policy in this area.
Between State and World: A history of the National Council of Women of Australia 1931–2006

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Linkage Grant)
Research team: Judith Smart, Marian Quartly (Monash University), and Ms LT Christopherson
Industry partner: National Council of Women of Australia

This project brings together academic historians and women active in the National Council of Women of Australia to write a 75th anniversary history of this important umbrella organisation. It took the voices of Australian women to national government and, through the International Council of Women, to the League of Nations before 1939 and then to the United Nations. It was thus the principal force behind the exercise of Australian women’s political citizenship across most of the 20th century.

The Council and the broad community of women whom it represents benefit by the validation of their shared memories and their sense of common purpose. The Australian community benefits from the renewal of social capital and the culture of political participation pursued by the Council which is now celebrated in its history. The nation benefits from a new knowledge of the role in national and international policy making played by the largest coalition of its women citizens. The grant runs from mid-2008 to 2011.

Life After Care — the life histories of those who left institutional and other forms of out-of-home care, 1945–1989

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Linkage Grant)
Chief investigators: Suellen Murray and John Murphy (Melbourne University)
Research team: Liz Branigan and Jenny Malone
Industry partner: MacKillop Family Services

This project, developed in close collaboration with the Industry Partner MacKillop Family Services, examines the impact of out-of-home care for the subsequent identities and life histories of successive generations of care leavers. While focused on Catholic institutions in Victoria, it provides more general insights into the role of the church-based children’s homes. A book, After the Orphanage: Beyond the Children’s Home, was published by UNSW Press and released in 2009.

150 Low Income Australians: A group biography over time

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Linkage Grant)
Chief investigators: John Murphy (University of Melbourne), Suellen Murray (RMIT), Jenny Chalmers (UNSW, formerly RMIT), Greg Marston (University of Queensland), Belinda Probert (La Trobe University) and Mark Peel (Monash University)
Research Team: Sonia Martin, Kate Connolly and Shaun Hanns
Industry partner: Jobs Australia

This project, which is being undertaken with Industry Partner Jobs Australia, examines how welfare-to-work policies are experienced. The project aims to illuminate how incentives and obstacles are perceived; describe patterns of interdependency; and understand people’s discourses and values about welfare and obligation.

Pathways into and out of Homelessness

Grantor: Australian Research Council (Linkage Grant)
Chief investigators: Chris Chamberlain and Guy Johnson
Industry partner: The Salvation Army Crisis Services and Home Ground Services

Effective Interventions to assist homeless people depend upon understanding the reasons why people become homeless and how they exit from homelessness. This research investigates people’s pathways into and out of the homeless population, and explains why some individuals experience a short period of homelessness, whereas others remain homeless for a sustained period of time. The findings inform our knowledge about best practice and effective service delivery. The research will influence the thinking of policy makers and service providers for some years to come.
Counting the Homeless 2006

Grantor: Commonwealth Department of Families, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs; all state and territory governments; the Australian Bureau of Statistics, and the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare

Chief investigator: Chris Chamberlain and David MacKenzie (Swinburne University)

This research project is designed to enumerate the homeless population in Australia on Census night 2006, using ABS census data supplemented by data from the third national census of homeless school students and information from the National SAAP Data Collection.

It found that the number of homeless people had increased from 99,900 in 2001 to 105,000 in 2006. These findings influenced the Commonwealth Government's white paper on homelessness (The Road Home, 2008) which set the target to halve homelessness by 2020. The Australian Government will spend $7.8 billion over the next five years to reduce homelessness.

Reports on homelessness for each state and territory government were released in July 2009. These reports provide information about the social characteristics and geographical distribution of homeless people at the local level. All state and territory governments use these reports to make decisions about the allocation of resources in their state.

Violence against Women During Homelessness

Grantor: The Salvation Army Melbourne Central Division Research and Advocacy Program

Chief investigator: Suellen Murray

This project investigates women's experience of violence during homelessness. The research aims to identify the impact of this violence on their health, the support that they received in response to the violence, and make recommendations regarding policy and practice to reduce violence against women during homelessness. It employs face-to-face interviews with 29 Victorian women aged from 19 to 54 years who had recently experienced homelessness.

A report, Somewhere Safe to Call Home: Violence Against Women During Homelessness, was released in 2009. The majority of the women had experienced long-term or chronic homelessness, and violence was the primary reason that had precipitated it. For all 29 women, violence had also been a part of their experience of being homeless and this report focuses on their experiences of violence during homelessness. The report also considers the impact of this violence on their health, their attempts to seek support, and policy and practice change that would improve the circumstances of women who are homeless and prevent violence against them.

SHANTUSI: Surveying HIV and Need among the Unregulated Sex Industry

Grantor: The Victorian Department of Human Services

Researcher: James Rowe for Inner South Community Health Services

This research involves an unprecedented level of investigation into the practices and characteristics of the unregulated sex industry within the state of Victoria. The primary aims of the research are to document HIV prevalence (if any) within different sectors of the industry, assess the needs of those who work in the unregulated industry (e.g. vulnerability to physical and sexual assault, the need for education with regard to workers’ sexual health) and the means of addressing high-risk sexual practices in an industry that is illegal in nature and consequently free of any meaningful regulation.

The field research commenced in July 2009 and has engaged with a significant number of street-based sex workers as well as smaller populations of private escort sex workers and migrant women engaged in illicit activities in the massage industry. The findings – to be released in late 2010 – will guide a number of interventions to reduce risk to vulnerable persons in the industry and in the interests of public health in general.

Developing a Research Agenda for Practice Based Evidence

Grantor: Australian Research Alliance for Children and Youth (ARACY)

Research team: Patricia Rogers, Kaye Stevens, Madeleine Valibhoy, Farida Fleming (CASR) Susana Gavidia-Payne (RMIT), Andrew Anderson (The Benevolent Society), Jan Mathews (Parenting Research Centre), Naomi Hackworth (Parenting Research Centre), and Leonnie Symes (Centre for Community Child Health)

Seed funding supported the collaboration to develop a research agenda for building practice based evidence about parenting and early childhood interventions through program evaluation. The project has brought together stakeholders with a range of perspectives to identify opportunities for collaborative research on how program evaluation can contribute to the evidence base and to evidence-based policy and practice. Practice based evidence is important for: learning about how to effectively translate evidence into practice; identifying and understanding innovative approaches; taking into account the impact of family values and priorities; and identifying differential outcomes for sub-groups of program participants - understanding what works in which context and why.
Sociology in Australia: A scoping study

Grantor: The Australian Learning and Teaching Council (formerly the Carrick Institute for Learning and Teaching in Higher Education Limited)

Research team: Helen Marshall, Peter Robinson, John Germov (The University of Newcastle) and Eileen Clark (La Trobe University)

Endorsed by: The Australian Sociological Association (TASA)

The project aims to review and scope the key issues facing sociology education across the higher education sector. The key findings were that while sociology is widely taught it is not as widely publicised as it could be. The identity of the discipline is complex, and this poses a challenge for teaching. Teachers of sociology also face difficulties in the current environment of higher education. The project will provide an evidence-based foundation for future investigations and interventions to improve educational quality in the discipline.

Findings were presented at the 2009 TASA Annual Conference and a report, Teaching Sociology in Australia: A Report to the Australian Learning and Teaching Council, was released at the Conference.

Public Sector Evaluation

Narrative Evaluation Action Research (NEAR) Project – Phase 4

Grantor: Department of Health

Chief investigator: Yoland Wadsworth

Collaborator: Karen Goltz (DHS N&WMR), John Wiseman (University of Melbourne), Gai Wilson, and Ani Wierenga (University of Melbourne)

The NEAR project was initiated in 2003 by the then Victorian Department of Human Services, Western Metropolitan Region as a workforce development project with a strong emphasis on reflective change-oriented practice.

The aim of the project has been to build the capacity of community health agencies to evaluate and report on their Integrated Health Promotion programming using strengthened narrative annual reporting. It is designed as a process to enable health promotion staff, practitioners, community members and management to have an increased opportunity to reflect upon their activities as part of annual work plan evaluation cycles. University collaborators have worked with more than 70 lead staff and management through the NEAR pilot Phase 1, 2 and 3. The current Phase 4 evaluation is scheduled for completion in 2010.

Developing program logics for legal aid services and legal process

Grantor: Victoria Legal Aid

Consultant: Patricia Rogers

The project explored how the program logics (an explicit causal model linking activities with intended or observed outcomes) might be developed and used in management and evaluation. An adaptation of Outcome Mapping was used to develop program logics for ongoing programs and specific interventions.

Unpacking the Mechanisms of Aboriginal Well-being Interventions for Children and Youth

Grantor: Department of Health, South Australia, under its Strategic Health Research Program

Research team: Margaret Cargo, David Evans, Mark Daniel and Chris Moilan (University of South Australia), Alwin Chong (Aboriginal Health Council of South Australia), Judy Taylor (Spencer Gulf Rural Health School), Patricia Rogers, Kaye Stevens, Gill Westhorp (Community Matters), and Laurence Kirmayer (McGill University)

The project distilled from published and unpublished literatures of interventions on the prevention of mental health difficulties and promotion of social and emotional well-being among Aboriginal children and youth, the relationship between the context in which these interventions are implemented, the mechanisms by which they work and the outcomes that are achieved. The project engaged decision-makers and end-users from government and non-governmental agencies and institutions in the knowledge synthesis process to facilitate the timely and relevant translation and application of study findings into programs and policies. It used a realist synthesis approach, which combines diverse evidence about effectiveness and the contexts in which particular causal mechanisms operate. This is the approach to evidence synthesis developed by Professor Ray Pawson who was a Visiting Professor at RMIT in 2007. Patricia was engaged to provide expert advice for the realist synthesis methodology for the project.
Impact Evaluation for Development

Grantor: Rockefeller Foundation, USA

Research team: Sanjeev Khagram (I-Scale, USA), David Bonbright (Keystone Accountability, UK), Patricia Rogers, Fred Carden and Sarah Earl (International Development Research Center, Canada), Zenda Ofir (EVAL-Net, South Africa)

This project aimed to broaden and deepen the range of rigorous methods and approaches to impact evaluation that are credible, readily accessible, and usable by those working in development. The team convened a workshop of invited participants at the combined conference of the African Evaluation Association and the International Initiative for Impact Evaluation to review a discussion paper and identify actions for evaluators, evaluation commissioners and managers, and evaluation agenda-setters to improve the rigour, appropriateness and usefulness of impact evaluation for development.

Review and analysis of leadership development practices and options for ensuring best practice delivery to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians

Grantor: Reconciliation and Repatriation Branch, Department of Families, Housing Community Services and Indigenous Affairs

Research team: Patricia Rogers and John Scougall

This two-month project undertook a literature review of current Australian and international practice in leadership development, and developed a discussion paper for a workshop discussing best practice in delivering leadership development for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women, men and young adults in the Australian context, and the implications for the design and delivery of the Indigenous Leadership Program.

Impact Evaluation Approaches for Collaborative Agricultural Research and Development

Grantor: International Fund for Agricultural Development

Research Team: Jamie Watts (Bioversity International, Italy), Patricia Rogers, and Doug Horton

This four-year research project aims to improve the usefulness of evaluation in agricultural R&D decision-making and programme improvement. It thereby aims to increase the impact of agricultural R&D programmes on development goals, by expanding the repertoire of the evaluation methods and approaches available to collaborative and applied agricultural R&D programmes. The research project will involve a realist synthesis of existing impact evaluations to identify how collaboration can improve livelihoods and environmental sustainability and a review of impact evaluation methods. A small number exemplary evaluations will be conducted, and an on-line resource portal and help desk to assist evaluation practitioners in the field of agricultural R&D to select and apply appropriate impact evaluation methods, will be developed.

Health BehaviourChange

Grantor: RMIT Health Research Institute

Research team: Kaye Stevens and Patricia Rogers

The research draws on health behaviour change theories across disciplines and intervention types with a particular focus on how the theories apply in different contexts. The project is building on research projects in specific areas of health behaviour change, (including Unpacking the Mechanisms of Aboriginal Well-being Interventions for Children and Youth project and the evaluation of the Sustainable Dairy Farming Families program) to further develop the realist approach which asks ‘What is it about this program that works for whom in what circumstances?’ The current research project aims to further develop the realist approach and to develop a better understanding of how to increase uptake of evidence at policy and practice levels.

An Introduction to Homelessness Data
(Under the Victorian Homelessness Research and Evaluation Capacity Building Project)

Grantor: Council to Homeless Persons
Consultants: Chris Chamberlain and David MacKenzie (Swinburne University)

An ability to interpret, utilize and make good use of data gives agencies a more effective way to report on their practice, lobby on behalf of the homeless population and understand trends and patterns in the homelessness sector and their own agency. Chris and David were engaged to deliver a number of introductory workshops which were designed for workers with little or no experience working with data. It covered the definitions of homelessness, how homelessness data is collected, homelessness data sources (Census, SAP, other service data), how data can be interpreted and the limitations of the data. The aim of the workshop was to teach participants how to actively work with data sets.

Effective use of program theory and logic models for evidence-based policy and practice, Pre-conference workshop, Australasian Evaluation Society, Canberra

Consultant: Patricia Rogers

It is now common place to use program theory, or logic models, in evaluation as a means to explain how a program is understood to contribute to its intended or observed outcomes. However, this does not mean that they are always used appropriately or to the best effect. At their best, logic models can provide conceptual clarity across complex programs, motivate staff, and focus evaluations. At their worst, they can divert time and attention from other critical evaluation activities, provide an invalid or misleading picture of the program, and discourage critical investigation of causal pathways and unintended outcomes. This course focused on developing useful logic models, and using them effectively to generate and retrieve evidence and to use it to improve policy and practice. It introduced participants to a range of ways of representing the logic of interventions, going beyond simple linear models. It addressed challenges such as: how to represent a complicated intervention with multiple contributions by different stakeholders (such as whole-of-government initiatives); how to represent complex interventions which are dynamic and emergent; the role of SMART objectives and other types of performance information in logic models; practical issues in developing and sharing logic models; common traps and how to avoid them.

Using program logic, Strategic Review Team, Department of Finance and Deregulation, Canberra

Consultant: Patricia Rogers

The course covered the use of logic models to articulate how a program or strategy is intended to work, and to synthesize evidence about its actual implementation and impacts.

Program logic, Department of Innovation, Industry, Science and Research, Canberra

The two-day course introduced the key concepts of program theory and logic models and discussed how to apply them to improve the understanding of Key Performance Indicators (KPIs) and evidence based reporting.
NVivo Workshop

These workshops introduce participants to NVivo; a program used for managing the analysis of qualitative data. The pre-workshop presentation demonstrates NVivo and offers a framework for deciding whether or not to use software of this type in a project. The hands-on introductory workshop ensures that participants will be familiar with the basic architecture of NVivo, and able to import, manage and code sources and to create and manage a coding structure. The advanced workshop enables participants to learn the entire architecture of NVivo, to run queries on coding that will advance their analysis and to create and use charts, reports and models that aid presentation of results. Both workshops use the tutorial ‘Volunteers’ project that comes with NVivo, but participants are encouraged to work with their own data if they wish to do so.

Scoping Study for Attrition Study of Victorian Lawyers

Grantor: Victoria Law Foundation
Research team: Sara Charlesworth, Iain Campbell and Estelle Tang
Collaborator: Victorian Women Lawyers

There is considerable concern, both on gender equality and business grounds, about the attrition of women lawyers from private practice in Victoria. Previous research by Iain Campbell, Sara Charlesworth, Jenny Malone and Estelle Tang on working-time patterns of solicitors in private practice draws attention to the important issue of high workloads, which in turn produces high attrition rates in law firms, especially for young female lawyers. This project scopes the potential and design of a large scale attrition study of lawyers in private practice in Victoria. It will undertake cross sectional and longitudinal analyses by sex of the Legal Services Board practicing certificate data (1998 to 2008) and identify the most appropriate methodology for a detailed attrition study.

Sexual Assault Workforce Development Project

Grantor: Centre Against Sexual Assault (CASA) House
Consultant: Suellen Murray

As part of new initiatives to increase support to victim/survivors of sexual assault, the Department of Human Services funds the development and delivery of training for new and advanced sexual assault workers in Victoria. CASA Forum formed a partnership with CASR to provide the training. Suellen has been engaged to provide expertise in the area of evaluation. This project is ongoing until 2011.

Visions for Victoria

Grantor: Victorian Trades Hall Council
Consultant: Larissa Bamberry

The Victorian Community Union Roundtable (VCUR) is a forum for Victoria’s non-government peak bodies to develop policy platforms and to engage on policy issues of mutual concern. Visions for Victoria is initiated by the VCUR whereby members of respective peak bodies, such as the Victorian Trades Hall Council (VTHC), contributes to a final document that outlines areas of mutual concern in the lead up to the 2010 State government election.

Larissa was engaged by the VTHC to review major industrial relations policy issues for the State of Victoria, to review materials produced by Uniting Church in Australia and Victorian Trades Hall Council, and to edit and produce a report on major industrial relations policy issues for Victoria based on materials and findings of reviews.
