Professor Nat Chard
8.11.68
Uncertain Precision
Architecture and the city balance the practical necessities of supporting our needs with the cultural ambition of providing pleasures. Many of these pleasures are tied up in practicalities, where architecture sets out to make our lives easier. This convenience can also anaestheticise our relationship with the world, encouraging a passive existence. Nat asks the question of how one could go about designing architecture to nurture a sublime or indeterminate condition, one in which we are active and experience an 'intensification of being'*. One part of this question is studied through projects that look at ways of establishing an indeterminate relationship with the existing city. The larger part of the work searches for ways in which the architect might go about designing and drawing architecture that embraces indeterminacy, both in advance of and during inhabitation.

Architectural Design, BY PRACTICE BY INVITATION, Design Practice Research at RMIT
To be launched by Professor Colin Fudge, Pro Vice Chancellor, Design and Social Context
Design Practice Research at RMIT is a longstanding program of research into what venturous designers actually do when they design. It is probably the most enduring and sustained body of research of its kind: empirical, evidence-based and surfacing evidence about design practice. It is a growing force in the world, with a burgeoning program of research in Asia, Oceania and Europe. This book documents some of its past achievements. Two kinds of knowledge are created by the research. One concerns the ways in which designers marshal their intelligence, especially their spatial intelligence, to construct the mental space within which they practice design. The other reveals how public behaviours are invented and used to support design practice. This new knowledge combined is the contribution that this research makes to the field of design practice research.
